LAST EDITION. A VANISHED ISLAND.

Great Sangir Said to Have Burst and Disappeared.

Awful Tale of a Volcanic Outbreak Told by a Dutch Skipper.

The Island Which Was Lost to Sight Contained 13,000 People.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)
SYDNEY, N. S. W., July 18.—The captain of the steamer Catterthun reports that on June 28 he called at Timor and found a Dutch steamer that had left Great Sangir Island on June 17. A few hours after the latter's departure from the island, he was told, the sound of a terrible explosion was heard in the direction of the Sangir group, and this was followed shortly afterwards by showers of ashes, which covered the deck of the steamer and darkened the whole atmosphere. When the clouds of debris had cleared away nothing was visible on the horizon but masses of vapor that extended for many miles. Great sangir, which prior to the explosion was in full sight, could not be seen. Six sailing vessels were anchored off the island, and it is thought that they must have been destroyed. The captain of the Catterthun also states that the island of Iazon, the largest of the Philippine group, has recently suffered severely from eruptions, the fire from which caused widespread devastation.

The Sangir Islands lie to the north of the island of Celebes, and are upward of fifty in number. The population of the group is placed at 80,000. The three largest islands, Great Sangir, Sijauw and Tagoandang, with those that surround each, form as it were, separate groups. Great sangir had an area of 275 square miles. The population of the island was in the neighborhood of 13,000. In the north-west part of the island was a volcano called Abu, or the "Ash Mountain," which had frequently caused great lava and boiling water thrown out by the volcano carried away rich plantations and destroyed 2,000 lives. There is also a volcano in Sijauw Island, which has a population of 3,000. In Great Sangir there were four kingdoms governed by rajahs. The whole group belongs to Holland.

WILL FIGHT FOR THEIR PAY.

Italian Laborers at Port Reading, N. J., Up in Arms.

They Have Possession of the Reading's New Branch Being Built There.

(SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.)
SEWARK, N. J., July 18.—The Italian strikers on the Bound Brook and Carteret Division of the Port Reading Railroad have not yet been paid all of their wages for June. On this account they struck last Friday. Seventy-five of the discontented laborers have entrenched themselves on the western embankment along the road about two and one-half miles northwest of this place. They are determined to allow no other laborers to go to work on that road until they have been paid.

Frank Davis, an Italian, is providing the strikers with food. He said to an EVENING WORLD reporter, who was at the strikers' camp this morning: "The claim of these men is perfectly just. Some of them worked a number of days in May, for which they have not been paid. The strike, however, is for the pay for the seven days from June 1 to the 7th. I don't know how long they will be able to hold out. I will stick to them as long as I have a cent in my pocket. They will repay me as soon as the railroad company has paid them off."

Not far from the Italian camp is a group of fifty-three Hungarians who are waiting for a chance to go to work. They, too, claim that the railroad company owes them four days' wages, and should even if the Italians permitted them to go on with the work, they would not lay a hand to a shovel until their four days' wages were also paid.

Both camps are very orderly and all the men deprecate the thought of fighting. The Italians have the greater grievance, however, and claim that if any attempt is made to drive them from their stronghold, they will resist with as much force as the company can command.

Stephen Kajtaya, who acts as leader of the Hungarians, told an EVENING WORLD reporter that in case the railroad company does not pay within a week the Hungarians will leave peacefully and seek for work elsewhere. The railroad company's pay tent stands midway between the camps of the Italians and Hungarians. Supt. D. D. McBean, of the Port Reading Construction Company, was sitting in the tent this morning, but denied his identity to an EVENING WORLD reporter.

He refused to know absolutely nothing about the strike.

The Hungarians and Italians feel very sore against Mr. McBean and seem to consider him the cause of their troubles. The road on which the Italians have struck is a branch, eighteen miles long, from the main track of the Jersey Central Railroad at Bound Brook to Port Reading, the new coal-shipping point of the Reading Railroad system.

The Port Reading Construction Company is building the road on behalf of the Reading system. The Port Reading Construction Company sues its contract to Contractor D. D. McBean for the construction of a part of the tracks of the road has been completed by Breidinger & Neatley, for the building of his portion of the road. Breidinger & Neatley held the job only a short while, after which work was resumed on it by the Reading Construction Company, with McBean as superintendent.

A week elapsed, however, between the quitting of the one company and the resumption of work by the other, and it is for the pay for labor performed during this period that the Italians have struck.

The strikers claim that the Port Reading Railroad had a timekeeper at the job during the period from June 1 to 7.

There are several foremen in and about the company's tent, but they all refuse to speak.

One of the tracks of the road has been completed, but there is a big obstruction, consisting of two freight gondolas, a number of work cars and a heap of ties, placed upon it. No train has come near this barricade since yesterday.

About 11 o'clock a train of three cars from Bound Brook approached the strikers' camp. One of the strikers' pickets signaled it with a red flag to stop. Which it did with a snarl of defiance from the barricade. A number of men on telegraph poles and were allowed to work on telegraph poles and wire fences along the road. The train then returned to Bound Brook.

(SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.)
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., July 18.—Sheriff Aiken, of Middlesex County, today summoned a posse to go to Port Reading, where trouble is expected with the striking Italians.

One of the favorite horses will send her faster mile over the superb track of the Detroit Driving Club than she ever trotted in her life. He goes to Port Reading, where he only trotted her own record, but to reduce the world's record as well.

HUNDREDS KISS THE RELIC.

St. Anne's Bone Draws Crowds to St. Jean Baptiste Church.

A Cripple Walks Without Crutches After Touching It.

Long before the doors of the quaint little Church of St. Jean Baptiste, in East Seventy-sixth street, were opened for 6 o'clock mass this morning, a throng of faithful parishioners had gathered, eagerly waiting to be allowed to enter and gaze upon or kiss the sacred relic of St. Anne, which has found its final resting place in the church.

THE SACRED RELIC.

Among the supplicants were those who were afflicted by disabling disease. A number carried canes and crutches. These joyfully ascended the flight of steps leading to the church, but there was noticed upon the countenance of each a certain expression of faith and hope strangely intermingled. Once inside the church there was noticed a hurried eagerness to get within view of the relic, which rested on its shrine at the left of the chancel rail, surrounded by ruby-colored lamps.

The relic itself consists of a piece of bone about two inches long and three-quarters of an inch wide, taken, so it is affirmed, from the forearm of St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin Mary.

The bone is fastened to a crystal mirror by a strip of parchment, yellow with age, on which is written in Latin:

"Ex ossa Sanctae Annæ Matris Beatissimæ Mariæ Virginitatis."

Four small pieces of shrouded flesh are at each of the four corners of the bone. The whole rests on the bottom of a circular casket of pure silver five inches in diameter and about three inches deep.

The relic is protected by a crystal cover, around the edge of which is a row of precious stones set into the silver rim of the casket. At 10 o'clock mass a man entered the church dragging a withered limb. His left leg, which he carried under his arm, was a mass of pure silver five inches in diameter and about three inches deep. He was a cripple, and every hour from 6 o'clock until noon granted to all who wished the privilege of seeing the sacred relic or having their crippled limbs touched by it.

Just as Father Tietz was about to replace the precious relic upon its shrine at the chancel rail, a man entered the church dragging a withered limb. His left leg, which he carried under his arm, was a mass of pure silver five inches in diameter and about three inches deep. He was a cripple, and every hour from 6 o'clock until noon granted to all who wished the privilege of seeing the sacred relic or having their crippled limbs touched by it.

When he reached the chancel rail he pressed his trembling lips to the casket, and then, with a look of perfect confidence, he turned back and walked down the aisle without using his stick. His head was thrown back and a look of perfect confidence was on his face.

A reporter accosted him after he had walked a block and he would not give his name, but said that it was the first time he had taken ten steps without the aid of his cane. "I shall come and kiss the relic every day," he said, "until I am cured. I do not doubt the healing power, and I am sure I will be cured of my infirmity."

KNOCKED DOWN AND ROBBED.

Highwayman Green Wanted Change for a Confederate $100 Bill.

Joseph Green, of 4310 10th street, was held in $2,000 bail at the Tombs Police Court this morning for highway robbery. Lombardo Cosmo, a young Italian laborer, of Bound Brook, N. J., swore that Green accosted him on Franklin street early this morning and asked him to change a one-hundred-dollar Confederate bill. Cosmo replied that he had no such money to change, so Green pulled out a $100 bill, which he offered to change. A struggle followed, during which Cosmo was knocked down, and Green fled with the money. He was caught by Ward Detective Mitchell.

IS O'DONNELL COMING

The Homestead Leader May Be on His Way to See Gompers.

He Left Pittsburg Last Night on a Mysterious Errand.

Not Yet Reached the City So Far as Gompers Knows.

In Hugh O'Donnell, the leader of the Homestead strikers, on his way to New York to confer with Samuel Gompers?

A telegram to THE EVENING WORLD states that Mr. O'Donnell left Pittsburg for the East on the 8:10 train last night on a mysterious mission. Mr. O'Donnell refused to state what or where his business was, but said that it was in connection with the strike at Homestead.

The 8:10 train on the Pennsylvania Railroad arrived in Jersey City at 9:23 this morning.

The train was carefully watched by EVENING WORLD reporters and the face of every passenger scanned, but Mr. O'Donnell did not get off.

Mr. Gompers said this morning that he had received a communication from Homestead last week stating that he might expect a visit from Mr. O'Donnell soon.

In view of this fact Mr. Gompers thinks it probable Mr. O'Donnell is on the way to see him.

The communication, however, was not official, nor of a formal nature, and therefore Mr. Gompers is not positive that O'Donnell's mission is for the express purpose of conferring with him.

Mr. Gompers said to an EVENING WORLD reporter this morning that there were many contingencies which may have called Mr. O'Donnell eastward.

It is his sole object in making the journey was to confer with the head of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Gompers thinks that the journey had been formally notified to that effect.

Chris Evans, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, said:

"I only know what I have read in the morning newspapers. If Mr. O'Donnell has started for New York I cannot conceive the nature of his mission unless it is to confer with President Gompers. However, it may be that he has another object of which I am not aware. If he comes to New York he will certainly give us a call."

Up to 10 o'clock Mr. Gompers had not seen or heard further from Mr. O'Donnell.

MAY BE TO JOIN O'DONNELL.
